

3rd International Web-Conference

Natural Resource Management for Global Food Security and Sustainable Development Goals

(2-3 December, 2022)

About the Conference

Concerns about the sustainability of the current level of natural resource consumption, altered ecosystem functioning, and climate change have led many to foresee an impending catastrophe in the food supply. Focus has turned to sustainable resource use and global food security as a result of the world population's rapid growth and the rampant overuse of natural resources. In order to ensure "common blueprint for peace and prosperity for people and the planet, now and into the future," the United Nations has established a set of 17 goals known as the Sustainable Development Goals or Global Goals. The UNGA set the SDGs in 2015 to be accomplished by 2030. To achieve SDGs, Elimination of unsustainable practices like prolonged groundwater overdraft, the closing of yield gaps with smart fertilizer application, and increases in crop yield through advancements in technology are some of the sustainable options for reducing pressure on the natural resource base and increasing production. This conference is being jointly organized by the Academy of Natural Resource Conservation and Management (ANRCM), India, and KSN University of Agricultural and Horticultural Sciences, Shivamogga to exchange ideas and discuss the discoveries and breakthroughs in the field of natural resource conservation and management among researchers, extension agents, academics, and students. Deliberations at the conference will probably be beneficial to participants in terms of learning about the work being done throughout the world.
